This book reflects many grandparents who are raising their grandchildren to become the best in life despite circumstances beyond their control. Often times, the grandparents are a second line of defense for their grandchildren and it is with that thought Grandma gained a voice. She is in her prime and she is doing whatever it takes to raise her grandchildren. They warmly refer to her as Grandma because she cared for them when things were bad in their first home, and eventually she would care for them full time in her home. The oldest grandchild ponders what his Grandma has done and is doing for them, and he wants to make her happy, but he has a bad day at school. He is afraid.
