But we have already seen that such motion of P will simultaneously trace upon the planes of the two wheels, the involutes AH and AI of the base circles. And in like manner it may be shown that the continuations J. and AK of these involutes may be generated by the similar and equal spiral ANQ, rolling in contact with the pitch circles, its pole Q being the tracing point. CHAPTER X. SPUR GEARING--CONTINUED. Conjugate Teeth. Sangs Theory. Path of Contact. Unsymmetrical Teeth Approximate Forms. The Odontographs. Diametral Pitch. Manufacture of Gear Cutters. Determination of Series of Equidistant Cutters. Conjugate Teeth. 280. It follows from the general principles stated in (181), that if a tooth-outline of any reasonable form be assumed, it may be generated by some describing curve rolling upon the pitch circle; and if that describing curve be determined, and used in connection with any other pitch circle, the tooth thus formed will evidently gear correctly with the assumed one. Teeth thus related are said to be conjugate to each other; since had the second one been given, the application of the above process would have resulted in the formation of a tooth identical with the first. Now it may be required to lay out a wheel to gear with one already made; and supposing the original...
